Norfolk’s police and crime commissioner to consult on fire service management

Norfolk’s police and crime commissioner has launched a public consultation on whether his office should manage the county’s fire service.

Lorne Green says the proposal could save millions of pounds and improve collaboration between the two services.

But Norfolk County Council, which currently oversees the service, says it could risk the closure of some stations.

The announcement comes after Mr Green’s office commissioned external consultants to examine whether a business case for change could be made, following the introduction of a new law last year which made it a legal duty for the emergency services to work together.

Fire union renews plea for PCC to leave service in hands of County Hall

The chairman of a firefighter's union has made a fresh plea for the police and crime commissioner to leave the service in the hands of the county council.

Alan Jones, chairman of the Norfolk Fire Brigades Union (NFBU), has urged Lorne Green to listen carefully to all views, as he assesses whether to apply to the Home Office to take on responsibilities of Norfolk Fire and Rescue.

Mr Green is currently in talks through his consultation into whether the future governance of the fire service should rest with him, taking him around the county soliciting opinions.

And Mr Jones, who has spoken out against the proposals in the past, was keen to re-emphasise the union's stance on the matter.

He said: "Our position has not changed - we have heard

DAVID HASNANT
 Local democracy specialist
info@hasnant.co.uk

Lorne's views and are quite happy with the way we are currently run by the county council.

"There is currently very good scrutiny of the service we offer, which stands up. We feel this scrutiny is best done by a panel of people, rather than just one person."

The NFBU has already gathered more than 1,200 signatures to a petition calling for Norfolk County Council to retain control of the service, and Mr Jones said he hoped Mr Green would take notice of this.

He added: "I really hope the future of the fire and rescue people are strongly opposed to this. The union has held meetings about this both in Norwich and Great

Yarmouth and our membership is against it. "When so many seem in opposition, how can it be pushed forward?"

Alongside the petition, union members will demonstrate in Great Yarmouth market place on Saturday, August 18.

Mr Green said: "While I respect the NFBU's opinions, I was disappointed they launched a petition against change several weeks before the draft business case was even published."

"I have heard first hand over the past few weeks the depth and variety of views of Norfolk Fire and Rescue personnel and look forward to hearing more over the coming weeks."

People have until Wednesday, September 5 to participate in the consultation, which can be done at www.norfolk-pcc.gov.uk

People of Norfolk are being urged to have their say on who should lead the county's fire service as a public consultation into the future governance of Norfolk's fire service enters its final stages. The public have been urged to give the "feedback" that will help shape the future of the service.

Norfolk's Police and Crime Commissioner Lorne Green launches the consultation on the proposal to become Police, Fire and Crime Commissioner for the county last month and has asked residents across the county to give the public to voice answering questions and expressing their views.

Mr Green will be at the following locations over the next week:

- King Street, King's Lynn, August 24 from 10am
- Colchester Road, Norwich, August 28 from 10:30am until 12:30pm
- Norwich Market, Norwich, September 3 from 10:30am

He said: "There is still time for people to attend (that means with) me before the consultation closes on September 17."

THESE WERE HIGHLIGHTED QUOTES BY NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL OVER THE ISSUE

Yesterday (28th Aug) councillors voted to discuss the proposals put forward by the PCC. But a number of concerns have been raised about the plans and they include:

- Replacing the fire and rescue service with the County Council presents a significant financial risk to the service, and therefore a risk to public safety
- The claimed 13.6m efficiency figure is misleading, because the claimed efficiencies and changes are speculative and unproven

Norfolk's chief councillor has warned proposals to pass control of Norfolk's fire service to the county's police and crime commissioner could offer both opportunities and risks.

Norfolk's chief councillor, Alan Rogers, said the proposals to take over the fire service from Norfolk Fire and Rescue Authority (NFA) are "misleading" and "flawed".

Rogers said the proposals "do not take account of the risks to public safety and the financial implications of the proposals".

He said the proposals "are a major change to the way the fire service is run and the risks to public safety are significant".

The Police and Crime Commissioner for Norfolk, Lorne Green, is currently taking over the governance of Norfolk Fire and Rescue Services.

We propose getting rid of eight fully operational fire appliances and replacing them with lightweight 4x4's.

This information is not widely known because it only appears in the full business case and not in the summary or online video.

Locally the stations at Heacham and Massingham are among the eight listed but this is extremely unfair for all of us. Individual fire engines can be used anywhere in the county and so for some of them can only increase the risk to everyone, wherever they live.

Many other changes proposed are things already planned by Norfolk County Council, so this proposal offers no real benefits...

But in the same breath he says it is "problematic", without specifying what the problems might be. He does not address one of the main objections to the proposal, which is that if it goes through, accountability and transparency in matters of policy and resourcing of the fire service will be greatly reduced. Mr Bailey urges people to read the proposal, but the PCC website does not have pages or links to other sites where the public can read the case against the proposal. The proposal itself was not part of the PCC's election manifesto. This process goes against basic democratic principles. I hope Norfolk residents will express their opposition in the public consultation.
